10:00 Faith Communities Enabling Inclusive & Equitable Cities Since the beginning of time, religions have significantly influenced the way cities are constructed and function. Cities were established around houses of worship that provided essential services and today, multiple religious markers are scattered around every city around the world, ranging from small local churches to cathedrals, mosques, synagogues, charity shops, schools, monuments of remembrance, gardens and parks, cemeteries, and others.

This session will provide a space to discuss the interlinkages between creating inclusive and equitable people-centered cities and the role world religions, their communities, and faith leaders play in bringing forward SDG 11.

Jessica Troni Portfolio Manager, Climate Change Adaptation – UNEP

Tom Barasa WWF Kenya

16:00 What the World Expects from Faith-based Organisations and What We Should Do The directors of six leading religion and ecology NGOs and initiatives will share their perspectives on the religion and ecology movement. Their work addresses the climate and environmental crises through policy advocacy, grassroots activism, sustainable lifestyles, religious education and worldviews, asset and facility management, habitat and species protection, science-policy-faith nexus integration, and more. There is a huge upswelling globally of innovative faith-based environmental programs - from religious funds in the trillions of dollars moving to sustainable investments, to on the ground forest and wildlife protection projects, to channeling vast faith-based tree planting to restore degraded natural areas, to powerful climate change advocacy and sustainable consumption initiatives.

Well organized and mobilized, the religious sector could become one of the most effective forces to address the climate and environmental crises. Over the past thirty years, researchers, environmentalists, and business and political leaders have come to understand the uniquely valuable role of religion in relation to climate change and environmental conservation. Groundbreaking work by a core of global religious environmental organizations, select high-level religious leaders, and many religious communities, has begun to harness the religious sector’s enormous size and considerable power for ecological sustainability.

10:00 Faith in Action: Only One Earth All religions, faith traditions and spiritual teachings guide us to care for the bountiful creation of the nature, living simply, and preventing the generation of waste. In line with the 2022 World Environment Day theme, 'Only One Earth' and building on the saga of the initiatives that Faith for Earth Councilors in India, began last year this session aims to highlight the indisputable fact that the time is Now to bring about a transformative change. It is time to live sustainably in harmony with nature and bring about the choices that create a positive impact on the environment we live in. Choices that can be influenced by spiritual guidance at an individual level and community level. This dialogue seeks to highlight the knowledge resources that individuals and communities at the local level can use to alter their choices and address global problems like pollution, desertification, and climate change. The engagement also seeks to provide a call to action to strengthen the movement of living in harmony with nature, translate our values and spiritual teachings into action, empower the youth to make sustainable choices and support local initiatives. It aims to strengthen the fabric of interfaith relations at a national level to make our planet a harmonious place to live in.
