Elder Dominique Rankin

Indigenous Hereditary
Chief

Elder Dominique Rankin is an Indigenous Hereditary Chief. This means that in order to one day take over from his father as Chief of his community, he also had to become a medicine man. Therefore, from his early childhood, he had to learn a body of knowledge and go through various initiations in order to become, many years later, a leader with exceptional life experience and greatness of spirit. The elders who guided him on this demanding path have always considered religions to be mashkiki, i.e. "medicine of the spirit", thus considering them all to be of equal value. And Dominique has always worked in this direction, despite a very brutal personal history in this regard. Elder Dominique held various positions, including that of Grand Chief of the Algonquin Nation (First Nations of Canada) in the 1980s and 1990s.
